

ATOS Archives Report
Dave Calendine

With the closure of the American Organ Institute at the University of Oklahoma, it became apparent that they no longer wished to house the ATOS archives. With that in mind, a new home was obtained by working with the Organ Historical Society.

All was moving smoothly for the transfer, then the COVID-19 Coronavirus pandemic struck, and everything has ground to a halt.

As of now, all of the ATOS archives are still in storage at the University of Oklahoma. The university is currently closed, so nothing is happening with the archives. When the university is able to reopen, the transfer of the archives will take place. Until then, there will be nothing else to report.
